Joseph Freeman. of Cavendish. Address on Tuesday evening, before the Literary Societies, by PRES. PEASE, of the University of Vt. Fire -A small wooden building on the Church, known a year or two since as the Frenchman named LaClare, was found to be on fire, about 5 P. M. Sunday. An alarm was sounded, and the Engines hurried to the spot. The Et an Allen was first on the ground, and had nearly extinguished the fire, when the cistern of the house, which supplied all the water thus far used, gave out. The only resource then, under the circumstances, was to bring water from the well of the French Church, nearly a thousand feet distant. For this both Engines were needed. The Boxer, which was prompt-Ir on hand, but had hitherto had nothing to do for want of water, now drew water from the well, and supplied the Allen, which threw upon the flames. While this maneuvie was in progress, the fire was more than held in check by the effo ts of half a dozen persons, who with one fire bucket, a butter firkin and a paint pot, drew water from the nearly exhausted cistern, and narrowed the fire to a spot on the roof, which the stendy stre m from the engines made short work with. The last spark, which stuck between two shingles, was extinguished by the boys with their "Young America" engine. The house was thoroughly gutted of furniture &c., at the start. The damage by fice was confined to the roof and one gable, and cannot be very great.

ANOTHER FIRE .- The labor spent in saving the "Trave lers Home" from entire destruction, on Sunday, proves to have been labor lost. The building burst into flames lasnight about ten o'clock and burned to the ground "without let or hindrance." It was evidently an incendiary fire, as the family did not occupy it again after the fire on Sunday. The fire was apparently set in the south end of the barn, which connected with the house, and was carried by the strong south wind through the entire building with surprising rapidity. Of course nothing could be done to save it. The firemen had a hard run thither (the Boxers getting in a it burn. Even the Hooks, who were promptly | first blown up. on hand, found nothing to be done. We understand that LaClare had replaced his furniture in the building, and that he han an insurance of $400 in the Vt. Mutual, on it and its contents. The place was occupied in former years, by "Bone" Brunell among others, and has had a bad name as a 'rum hole' and resort of bad char-

Boys Beware .- There have been several narrow escapes recently of lads who fell while having hold of the drag ropes of the Engines on their way to fires. The Engines are often under very rapid headway, and at such times, especially in the evening, a false step of one in front of the machine may cost him his life or some broken bones. As a general rule the boys had better leave the la- ribaldi. The Monteur has the following: bor of dragging the Engines to the men.

Baing the Fire-buckers.-The moral of the | 5000 prisoners had arrived at Marseilles and small fire Sunday is that our citizens should | Toulon. not leave their fire-buckets at home when they run to a fire. Effective as our engines are, there are cases when the buckets can do as much as the machines. The presence of half a dozen buckets of any kind, Sunday, would have spared the engines their labor, and lessened the damage done by half. There was but one fire-bucket at the fire, that we could discover, after considerable search.

New Publications.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF EDGAR ALLEN POE, with a brief memoir; 1 vol., 32mo. J.S. Redfield : New York.

This is an extremely pretty volume, containing about 30 of the poems (mostly short), of that strange genius, Edgar Allen Poe. A brief preface purports that the collection was published under the eye of the author, from which we infer that this is a reprint. Poe died in 1849. A brief memoir, and an engraved likeness of Poe, add to the desirableness of the volume. Though there is little enough in the account of Poe's life and charsome of his writings are very striking. His poem, The Raven, (the first in the present volume), is one of the remarkable productions of the English language.

The book can be found at Fuller's. BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.-Leonard Scott & Co.'s reprint, New York.

The June number is mostly occupied with political and war articles, concerning the the present war, in which the High Tory leanings of Blackwood are apparent. There is a lively article on Lord Macauley and the Three Days Later from Europe. Duke of Marlborough, in which, if the writer does not establish a very immaculate character for the latter (he does not claim it by any means), he clearly makes out shameful dishonesty in the former, so far as his worst charges against the great general are con-

The Post, speaking of a fugitive slare, says - The slave had his lib rty forced upon him, and is now in Canada hungry and road to the Falls, near the new French naked, we doubt not." It must be a great consolation to this unfortunate and misguided man, who has rejected the democratic doctrine "Traveller's Home," now occupied by a of the divinity of slavery, and accepted the heresy of freedom, that he can return at his own pleasure. Although he has ungratefully fled from the master that protected im, and is now, as the Past does not doubt, hungry and naked in Canada, he has only to cross over the line, and without expense to himself, but wholly at the charge of this enevolent government, he can be quickly transported back, where he may fill himself with the food and clothe himself in the garments of slavery.

The patriarchal institution closes its doors pon none of its erring chilren. Do hereby certify, that at the request of the house of Gottig & Will, of this place, I have made an analitical examination of U. Wolfe's Aromatic Schiedam Schnapps, with the object of ascertaining if it contained any substance noxious to health, and to inform them as to its true composition and relative quality with the chergins that are offered in the market, and the results of my observations nd experiments are as follows :--

Udolpho Wolfe's aromatic Schielam schnappe is a spirituous liquid, of a very agreeable aromatic dor, completely transparent and almost colorless having only a very slight that of yellowish gray; ts flavor is strong and very agreeable to the palate. It marks 20 degrees in Cartier's alcohol weigher r 52 degrees 5 hundredths in Gay Lussac's sleenotre. By the distillation in a belaium marie ith an apparatus consisting of a class retort and a injent surrounded with ice, I have collected in s recipient an alcoholic liquid with a very revable aroma completely colorless and transpara, which marked 90 degrees in Cartier's alcoholic sulpher, or 70 degrees 5 hundredth on Gay Lussic's alcometre; and which represented as a whole 7 per cent of arcenatic Schfedam schnapp: subect to distillation in the retort. This liquid did not soil the transparency of the distilled water in mixing it with the same, and its agreeable aroms is doubtless due to a very trifling amount of an essential - Il inseparable from alcohol.
